I've decided to create a website for a business/project called "Reminiscent", a communication technology that would ideally allow people to smell nostalgic scents through a computer screen. The name is a pun between the word "reminiscence" and "scents" as you would be able to use scents to reminisce on past memories. Because this isn't physically possible (yet), I've decided to create a speculative website of what it could look like. I was inspired by "scratch n sniff" stickers and thought about how I could give this a digital personality. I was originally going to set it up as a small business from which people could shop from, but decided to go the more artistic route and make it into an interactive project where people would be able to interact with the scents on the site itself.
